| 2 | It was very interactive, with a lot of room to practice. We were "thrown into cold water" with some exewrcise which was good, because in real life you can't always prepare either. I liked the small groups and the chance to get to know some of the fellows better. |
| 5 | - the first session was most helpful with lots of little tasks (e.g. given topic which one should give a talk about spontaneously)- introduction of several techniques (breaks, questions etc.)- recording and feedback afterwards |
| 8 | Individual feedback that gave everyone the chance to improve their own issues. |
| 11 | I liked that Steve asked concretely what do we want to change and improve, and paid attention to that for each of us  during the whole seminar. |
| 14 | Many excercises and getting feedback |
| 20 | practical units, hints for individual improvements, wide range of topics |
| 23 | It was very interactive |

| 2 | The body language part (3rd session) didn't really work online. At least not for me. Also I thought the 3rd session came a little too late after the presentation |
| 5 | - sessions were too long with too little breaks (e.g. no time for biobreak)- no clear communication how long the sessions would last and what to prepare for the sessions- repeating content over the three sessions (same topics and same feedback over and over again e.g. breaks, questions) --> more variety in tasks, tips and feedback |
| 11 | Some parts of the workshop were made for presenting in person (body movement), so they could be adapted to online presenting (body movement in front of the screen). |
| 14 | Would be great to have an in person session about movement, gestures, etc. |
| 17 | The fact that it was online has caused some limitations |
| 20 | (offline training would still be better) |
| 23 | The purpose and necessary preparation for the seminar was not made clear in advance |
